RENO – A Florida woman has filed a lawsuit against the owner of Heavenly Mountain Resort (located on Lake Tahoe's south shore) for damages associated with a January 2011 skiing accident. Kimberly Bland, a Miami area paramedic, claims she was seriously injured when a Heavenly Mountain Resort employee riding a snowboard crashed into her as she was deciding where to ski next on the resort's Nevada side. The lawsuit alleges the resort is liable for its employee's negligent actions and is therefore, is liable for Bland's injury-related damages. According to reports, Bland was knocked unconscious and suffered head, neck, shoulder, and back injuries in the accident.

Due to the inherent risks associated with skiing and snowboarding, not every ski or snowboard accident victim is entitled to financial compensation for accident-related damages; however, victims seriously injured in an accident caused by the negligent actions of another person may be able to collect compensation. Before a victim can collect compensation, they must prove the defendant's actions were negligent and that because of the defendant's negligent actions they were harmed. Ski and snowboard accident victims should look to an experienced personal injury attorney for help in establishing fault.
